Now I don't know if I should be thinking that I've been made into a rogue taxon, that the evolutionary process has reached the end point of no return, that I can't unmake my own ancestor or unmake my current child, that all seeming has been for naught, that the list of living is but a fraction of the post-singularity species that will be. One particular scenario is when I receive a message which has at least one and only one of the conditions. I have written a find script but it doesn't seem to work. save_json='cat messages.json | jq '' | grep -m 1 'A1|A2|A3' | jq -r '[0].inventory.name' rm -rf messages.json echo "$save_json" >> messages.json find -type f -maxdepth 1 -exec basename {} \; >> messages.json The output of the script is: D1... A1... A3. How can I make the script work as expected? A: Your input files are neither in a single directory nor located on the same filesystem as the script, so the basename and file command will likely fail. You may want to use sed and/or tr; set -- $messages.json "$save_json" echo "$1" | sed -n '1-{s/\// /;f678ea9f9e
